"S... new, Betty, Julia, Susan, Murphy, Julia..." The roll call is on, and the gingerly dogs of the police "KQ Squad" wait in T1 ground to line up beside their respective handlers.

One by one, they give the all-clear in change, half-sung at V. Mohanan, a co-ordinating handler.

"There's been a dog here since childhood," he beams. "So, it gives me great joy to be part of the KQ team."

The unit currently has eight members, two of them are men for a training course in Kerala. "They are assigned different areas of specialisation: tracking, explosive sniffers, narcotics detection, etc.," says Mohanan. "The breeds include the Belgian Malinois, Doberman, and Labrador. Each one has very handlers."

A dog's sense of smell is several hundred times stronger than a human, making them excellent trackers. "They are also highly intelligent, they are a breed that can be trained for a variety of tasks."

A KQ squad dog is "selected" when it is in the state. During this time, the mother dog receives special care. The puppies are born in a thoroughly vetted, and the breed club of India's certification is mandatory for the dog to be selected for the KQ squad.

"The parents must be top dogs with achievements, as a large family record," he says. "After pups are selected from a litter, handlers take care when they have their puppies old. From that moment, the handler becomes the dog's parent. Handler stands for - leading, action, reward, duty, loyalty, education, and responsibility."

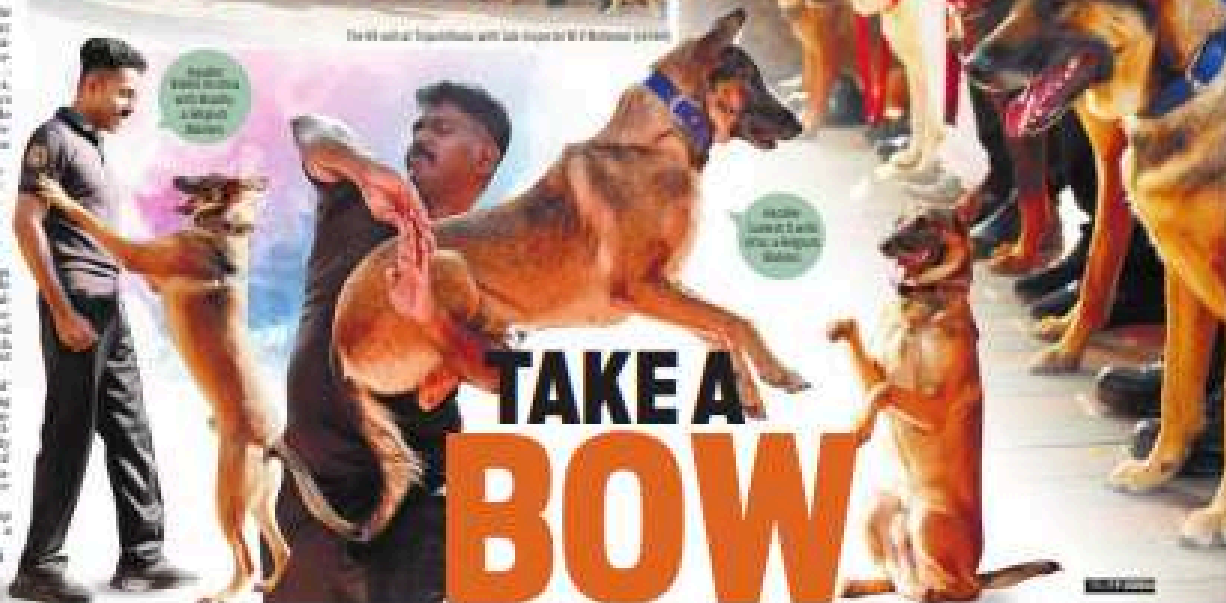

After multiple training sessions, the dogs receive their final, much to their joy command. The handlers explain that this drill is meant to demonstrate the dogs will not shy away from any daunting challenge.

Mohanan recalls a couple of cases in which KQ dogs played vital roles. "A few years ago, our handler dog Gidde helped catch a stolen property in the state. Thinking the victim, the dog set off a fire in a nearby street. Two days later, the body washed up on the banks of the river, just a kilometre away," he says.

Another handler says that the breed that at the International Police Conference in 2009. "There was a lot of confusion about whether it was a Doberman, a Labrador, or a German Shepherd. The presence of experts showed that it was a Doberman."

could be a terror attack," Mohanan recalls.

Like the men and women in uniform, the officers also, police dogs are also trained with respect. "If a dog does make a mistake, a command is given to it. If it doesn't, it is not a dog," he says. "They are trained to be obedient and to be able to follow commands."

PAK MAN PRAYS FOR MODI'S RULE

"I pray to the almighty to give us Modi and have him rule our country." This quote from a Pakistani man broke the internet on Thursday. Posted by a former Pakistani journalist and YouTuber, Sana Ahmed, a trending video showed a Pakistani youngster frustrated with the economic crisis railing against his country's leadership, and praising Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi. "If we had Narendra Modi, we wouldn't need Nawaz Sharif or Benazir or Imran, not even (late former military ruler) General (Parvez) Musharraf. All we want is PM Modi, as only he can deal with all mischievous elements in the country," he says. He also appeals to fellow Pakistanis to flee the country. "Pakistan se zinda bhago chahe India chale jaao (Run for your life away from Pakistan, even if it is taking shelter in India)," he says.

Dreaming a Holistic, Sustainable Urban Transportation: KMRL MD speaks

Pooja Nair and Santhra Nimesh

The Kochi Metro, being the first to be commissioned into service in a comparatively short time span, is thriving despite its journey through hurdles. Kochi Metro Rail Limited (KMRL) is looking forward to the Urban Mobility India Conference, which is to be held for the first time in Kerala, intending to expand the possibilities of Kochi Metro. The KMRL Managing Director, Lokanath Behera, states certain expectations for the UMI Conference & Expo 2022 and Kochi Metro. In the present time of increasing population, Kochi Metro keenly focuses on maintaining sustainability. The KMRL MD says that Kochi should have a network of public transport, which would make it more effective. The KMRL plans to provide more facilities, including virtual tickets that function as intermodal integration, to commuters in the near future. The perceptible impact would only happen if the targeted public opted to travel by metro. Thus, various services like more feeder buses, pre-booking, integrated travel tickets, etc. "Another spot outlining availability might be the internet radio facility, which would expand the sides of entertainment and formal announcements," says Sri Behera. "To attract commuters, we initiate various forms of entertainment and public information, such as Internet radio, virtual tickets, etc. "People should realize this is a good system," KMRL's MD added. The main topic of this year's UMI Conferences is going to be sustainable transportation in the next 25 years. "We should produce everything in India rather than import from other countries, and new innovations are also intended so that our planet will be a better place," says Sri. Behera. "The Atmanirbhar Bharat vision is also promoted through KMRL by being self-reliant and depending upon its own resources." Various integrating developments are also demanded through sourcing international agencies for tackling issues of funding, implementing long-term licensing, and adopting the public-private partnership (PPP) mode. "All these possibilities would be looked at in a holistic way for practical implementation," he added.

"Almost 52 percent of the requirements are generated by solar in terms of electric transport, and other target phases would be met in the next 5 years. Usage of hydrogen and ammonia as fuels, increasing the availability of electric vehicles, developing good charging facilities, and implementing battery-less operations are also being considered. KMRL also has an interest in using the best futuristic technologies for sustaining them in the future.

"The integration of Metro cards into being useful as a single-day temporary pass is yet another transformation brought up to date," MD added.

"Water Metro is basically for islanders; they face a lot of difficulties and don't get boats when they need them; they might also not get secure and comfortable boats; the 10 islanders surrounding Kochi will be the gainers irrespective of its other potentials," said Sri. Behera.

The first water metro project in India is also eagerly awaited by the public, which sees great potential in serving the poor, the island natives, and Kerala tourism.

The Kochi metro stands out with its variations by being able to provide opportunities for women, maintain sanitation, and have public support. KMRL is also intending to introduce robots for PR work, which will also commence at the UMI conference.

The KMRL MD says, "In 5 years, we want to complete at least 2 lines, which is Phase 2, and we'll also try to progress the Phase 3 developments."

"The Kochi metro has taken the heavy burden of vehicular traffic off the road."

VEGANISM: A balanced diet?

SANTHRA NIMESH

Veganism means avoiding all animal protein such as dairy products, meat, fish, etc. An individual who follows this dietary regimen is called a vegan. A vegan diet includes fruits, vegetables, legumes such as peas, beans, and lentils, nuts and seeds, bread, rice, pasta, dairy alternatives such as soymilk, coconut milk, almond milk, etc.

"I wanted to save the environment by not consuming any animal products", Shalini Parthasarathi, a follower of the vegan diet states how she switched her choice of diet. "Veganism is usually followed for many reasons such as they might not like to hurt animals or for their health benefits or for the environment." Neeta Pradeep, a dietician of Silverline hospital comments, "Whatever the reason may be, being a vegan is not a joke or to show off through the internet. Nowadays people follow veganism just because it is trending. According to reports the growth of people becoming vegan has drastically gone higher when compared to the five years before statistics."

The benefits of being a vegan according to the research done by the American Academy of Nutrition and Dietician is that a well planned vegan diet can reduce the risk of heart attack and metabolic syndrome to an extent. The reason is that the vegan diet tends to have high fibre, magnesium, folic acid, vitamin c, and fibre chemicals, the vegan diet is also low in saturated fat and cholesterol, so that is the main reason why a vegan diet can reduce the incidents of cardiovascular diseases.
